Windows mobile devices are seeing their sales decline which is a cause for concern for investors and the tech industry, but for Microsoft this will allow it to build up a strong position in the new market of lower priced, simpler devices. In order to boost this area, Microsoft is trying to get Windows RT, its OS for new tablets to attract more OEMs and consumers. Now, Microsoft is previewing a new RT tablet that is priced at $199 (about RM744). According to a new report from TD Securities, the company is trying to position Windows RT-based devices as a new Microsoft's "entry-level" device, much like it has tried to position the Surface 2.0 as a no-frills, cheaper option to the Surface Pro. Not only is the $199 price attractive, but it's also on par with tablets from competitors in the market, including Amazon's Kindle Fire HD and the iPad, which also costs $199. TD Securities analyst Ravi Srinivasan has said the tablet will be available from
