there are two types of xway: fast ethernet and isdn. fast ethernet is the standard ethernet connection used with your pc and is used to connect to older telemecanique products. isdn is a high speed digital connection used for connecting to telemecanique products that support isdn. xway - xway is the generic name for the communication link between your pc and telemecanique plc over ethernet and isdn. xway supports different protocols and connection methods, allowing the transfer of data in a variety of ways. xway is unique in that it is a "hundred percent" telemecanique compatible communication link. this means that it fully supports the latest telemecanique software and hardware. for example, if you have a new plc or cpu, you can download the latest drivers from telemecanique, install them, and immediately connect to your telemecanique plc or cpu! note that xway was designed for use with the latest telemecanique "auto" drivers, but it is a fully compatible protocol and can be used with earlier software and hardware. i am able to get the binaries for pl7-2 once i use the personalization program of the product. please note that to run the personalization program, the telemecanique software needs to be restarted after personalization is complete. after it has been set up, you will have the option to download the binaries and the dtm files for the following programming tools: dtm file for altivar 600 series process drives dtm file for altivar 900 series process drives dtm file for all other supported altivar series drives (includes atv12, atv31, atv312, atv32, atv61, atv71, atv212) dtm file for altistart 22 and altistart 48 soft starters dtm file for altivar 320: dtm file for altivar 340: winzip or 7-zip extraction software may be needed for compressed/zipped files. if needed you can download free version 7-zip from; please let the software and dtm's install in their default file locations (just click next and install). 5ec8ef588b
