Conclusions ===== This paper presents a MEMS-based capacitive humidity sensor with a hygroscopic organic polymer for the detection of relative humidity. The device is based on surface acoustic wave propagation on a LiNbO<sub>3</sub> (LN) substrate, which is encapsulated by a humidity-sensitive organic film. A relationship of capacitance *vs*. relative humidity is established for the device, with a sensitivity of 730 pF/% RH. The operating range of the device is from 25% to 95% RH. When the sensor is used to detect relative humidity of dry air, its response time is from 40 to 50 s, which is much faster than the response time of the PDMS sensor. It should be noted that the sensitivity is calculated after the device is exposed to relative humidity for 3 days. The sensitivity can be easily decreased by exposure to relative humidity for a longer time.
